The state of Oklahoma is moving to block the federal government from forcing it to accept records related to President Donald Trump's tax returns. In a letter sent Monday to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, Oklahoma Attorney General Mike Hunter said the state is "extremely concerned about the potential reach of the federal government into our state." Specifically, Hunter questioned whether the federal government could force the Oklahoma Health Care Authority to turn over "documents concerning current patients, former patients and patient billing." Mnuchin's office declined to comment, citing the ongoing litigation. Oklahoma is one of several states to resist a yearlong request from Congress for its tax returns. A federal judge ruled last week that Treasury violated the state's sovereign immunity by requesting the state's records on Trump. In response, lawyers for Oklahoma told the judge the request was not relevant to the federal lawsuit over Trump's tax returns and the president's lawsuit against them. The Treasury Department argued the law requires any state receiving federal funding to comply with the records request. Oklahoma received $8.8 million from the federal government in 2016 and 2017, according to the state's 10-year taxpayer rebate report. In its letter Monday, the state expressed its respect for the federal government's "important role in upholding the rule of law" and said it would resist any further efforts. "The Oklahoma AG's office is determined to protect the state and its citizens from unwarranted federal overreach," the letter said. Q:
