Once you open Photoshop, a welcome screen will greet you. Your Photoshop image will appear on your desktop. You'll be able to browse the document palette, and two new windows will display the tools available to you as well as the layers you have created. To save an image, select File > Save, click OK to save the image to the location you want to save it, and click File > Save As to save it to a new location. Image 1 of 2 Next Image 1 of 2 Next Tool Name Tool Location Full Photoshop 7.0 Photoshop CS6 $6.00 You can also use the File > Open command to open a new file. The main screen of Photoshop contains the following areas. The Layers Area The Layers Area holds the layers that you have created. To access the layer panel, click the down arrow icon at the upper-right corner of the window. When you click on a layer in the Layers Area, a thumbnail of that layer appears in the panel. Layers with black and white squares appear in light blue, and layers with color squares appear in dark blue. In Photoshop, image layers have names and they can be set to be visible or invisible. A color-coded window display indicates whether an individual layer is visible or not: The Paint Area The Paint Area contains a selection brush and several image-editing tools. You can use the different tools in the Paint Area to perform the following tasks: The selection brush is an easily recognizable tool because of its white-and-red-color-tipped mouse-pointer. You can edit any selection in the Photoshop document. To apply and set a new selection, click on the tool and drag over the area of the layer that you want to select, then release your mouse button when you see the white outline. You can also press the F key or scroll through the options in the menu by clicking on the tool's icon. To create a new selection, simply click and drag over the image you want to select. In the days before federal legalization, Canadians bought products like bongos and pipes illegally. Public-spirited harm-reduction workers like Bruce Stuart, an engineer, and Duncan MacPherson, a property developer, used their conventional skills to create and sell their own brand of “weed-approved” plumbing products. Their company, Ulti-cone, opened its doors in Vancouver in 2007, and the two men soon gained a loyal clientele that continues to grow. But today, both men are fighting for their lives. MacPherson, 52, was diagnosed with lung cancer in October, after having three large tumors cut from his body. Stuart, 49, faces prison time and several potential life sentences. He was convicted in April on charges of trafficking marijuana, after police found 342 kilograms of the drug in his possession. In the months leading up to his arrest, Stuart and MacPherson worked to prove their company’s safety products are not dangerous to use. They have submitted both English and French versions of their website to the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, but they have not received any approval. As well, Stuart has lost his job as a product-testing consultant, meaning he no longer earns a monthly salary. He said he has gone hungry to pay for his mounting legal fees and medical bills. “I can’t sleep. I have lost weight, I’ve had trouble sleeping, and I’m depressed. I’m a closed-down person right now. I can’t really do anything. I can’t really speak to anyone. I can’t do anything,” Stuart told The Vancouver Sun. “There was such a lack of research and background done on these products. And the government never should have sold them to Canadians when we needed to know what was actually in them.” On Thursday, Stuart and MacPherson attended their first hearing in the Federal Court in Vancouver. The two men face fines of up to $1 million each, and up to seven years in prison if convicted. But they are hopeful that soon, someone at Health Canada will take a second look at their weed-safe products, which are not dangerous but they are not approved. “We’re trying to get them to acknowledge their mistakes,” Stuart said. “And it
