Book Video Training And Tutorial & Get Crack For The Tools.The Cannes Film Festival is known for its long lines and lavish red carpets, but it may have lost its biggest draw this year. Six of the most sought-after stars turned down the offer of attending the 87th edition of the festival, Variety reports. The stars, including Woody Allen, Leonardo DiCaprio and Meryl Streep, cited the threat of coronavirus in their refusal. As of Monday morning, the number of cases in France jumped to more than 4,000 with more than 860 confirmed cases of Covid-19. France's health ministry said Paris was the second most affected region in Europe after Spain and almost 22,000 people have been tested. The organisers quickly introduced new measures to cater to filmmakers, including having hand sanitiser in the toilets and screening incoming films with audiences in their living rooms, rather than in cinemas, which were already packed. In a statement, the French Film Federation said: "It is true that we are disappointed because, at Cannes, for the last two years, we experienced, and this year as well, an exceptional atmosphere created by the stars of cinema. "We are concerned by the hundreds of new cases in the world and we salute the professionals who work and always take care of the health of their fellow citizens." The last festival was postponed until September last year after the deadly virus killed more than 600 people in Wuhan. This week's edition of the Cannes film festival has just three premieres, compared with 16 in 2018, reflecting the coronavirus risks to attendance and the audience. But festival organisers said there has been no drop-off in audience demand and most cinemas have remained open. "The festival will run as scheduled," festival CEO Thierry Frémaux told reporters. "We will have three feature presentations but, even for us, it's a challenge," he said, adding that 33% of the 2020 attendance will be in the form of crowds of people watching films at home. "And the festival's days are still dedicated to screening films." With over 14,000 journalists and industry insiders attending the festival, the decision was not taken lightly. The stars' absence will be an almighty blow to the festival, which
