The bridge is not up but if you use a different interface, or a different subnet or dns server., Modulation of diphenylcarbazine-based phenolic reagent for reductive coupling reaction with aromatic amines by solvent effects and stoichiometry. The effect of solvent on the reductive coupling reaction between various phenolic reagents and aromatic amines was studied. Phenolic reagents (1-phenyl-2-methylaminopropane, 2,4-dimethyl-aniline, 2-methylaniline, and 2-methylphenol) react with diphenylcarbazine in ethanol to give the corresponding 4-amino-2-methylphenols in good yields. The reaction could be extended to 1-phenyl-1H-pyrrole-2-methylamine, 1-phenyl-2-pyrroleethylamine, 1-phenyl-2-pyrrole-3-methylamine, and 1-phenyl-1,3-dimethylpyrrole. The reaction mechanism of the reaction has been proposed. A quantitative correlation between the rate of the reaction and the basicity of the reaction solution was observed. The stoichiometry of the reaction was determined and it was shown that the reaction occurred via a 2:1 phenolic reagent-phenolic amine complex. The addition of only one equivalent of phenolic amine quenched the organic radical generated from the reductive coupling reaction. Wabi-sabi-san is a term that could be translated from Japanese as "sadness/beauty in simplicity". It is sometimes described as the "Japanese aesthetic of impermanence", which is the characteristic of everyday life in a close-knit traditional culture. Wabi-sabi is "an approach to life that deliberately minimises material possessions, focusing instead on the ephemeral beauty of the moment and the joy of harmony between people and natural surroundings". Wabi-sabi also refers to the Japanese art of masterly craftsmanship, which emphasises the
