Photoshop is a highly computer-dependent program. To open, save, modify, or print a Photoshop document, you need the original image in a suitable file format. Even when you do save an edited image as a file (as opposed to only using a Photoshop file system), your computer usually stores the image as the original image file format. Adobe's PhotoShop is available for Windows, Mac OS X, and Linux. You can also buy the programs separately for various other platforms. See Appendix A for details. ## Opening Photoshop When you start Photoshop for the first time, you see the opening splash screen shown in Figure 7-1. FIGURE 7-1: This splash screen greets you when you open Photoshop for the first time. You can start Photoshop from the Explorer, or you can launch it directly from the desktop by double-clicking its icon. Photoshop is a large application, so it's not always easy to find its features. You can make Photoshop's interface a little more manageable by opening up the menu bar and choosing Window⇒Show Menu Bar to show it on the top of the image editing window. You can start Photoshop in Quick View mode to make it quicker to work on editing an image. Just choose Edit⇒New⇒Quick View or press the Q key. You can then close the Quick View window or use the Next and Previous buttons to step through the steps you want to take. However, just remember that Quick View mode works in a limited window and won't allow you to go back. Also, Quick View mode doesn't include layers. When you launch Photoshop from the desktop, you can select which program settings you want to use. Open the main Photoshop menu (the icon in the upper-left corner of the window shown in Figure 7-1) and choose Application Settings. Choose Preview, Fonts, and Colors and then select the item that most closely resembles your preferences in the image-editing programs. ## Choosing a Preset The Preset Manager appears when you open Photoshop for the first time. The top part of the window shown in Figure 7-2 opens to show all the available Presets. You can choose the preset that best suits your image-editing needs. FIGURE 7-2: The Presets Manager looks a bit like the Select Dial in Windows.

Brexit Minister David Davis will call on Japan's Prime Minister Shinzo Abe to drop his opposition to a new trade deal between the UK and the EU. Davis says he and Abe, who will meet on Friday in Japan, will talk about the benefits of an "ambitious" free trade agreement. Davis says: "Prime Minister Abe and I agree that we need to deepen our economic relationship, and to ensure that the Brexit negotiations result in a new Free Trade Agreement that will benefit the UK, and Japan, and the global economy. "During our talks I will make it absolutely clear that there must be a new deal which, if done right, will be in our mutual interest." Japan 'needs to reform' its workforce after Brexit A Post-Brexit world will drive up demand for skilled professionals like technicians and scientists, such as those working at the Hitachi plant in Tokyu Hands and other Japanese manufacturing sites. By Stephen Bassett in Tokyo Updated: August 30 2019 11:33 BST The Japanese government is stepping up its efforts to strike a free trade deal with the UK after it leaves the EU in March. Brexit minister David Davis says the process will be a joint one with Japan, and is optimistic that it will be completed by 2020. His comments come amid growing tensions between Britain and Japan over the issue of export controls. "We're in the process of talking to different countries about how we want to see a free trade agreement work, and how it can be the best for both sides," Davis told a press conference in Tokyo. "I'm confident that Japan will be one of them. I'm optimistic we'll see the first round concluded by the end of next year, so a phased approach. I am confident that Japan will be one of those countries." He added that Japan "needs to reform" its workforce after Brexit. Joining the Brexit talks Davis, who met Japan's foreign and trade ministers on Wednesday, said that he will be making sure that Tokyo understands how important their businesses are to the UK. "The Japanese businesses I've visited are very important to the UK economy, and I'm going to be making sure that all parties are working together to achieve the best Brexit deal for the UK," he said. "I want to make sure that Japan understands how important their businesses are to the UK economy. It is a very important part of the whole European economy." Davis is scheduled to meet with Japan's Prime Minister Shinzo Abe on Friday. Davis'
