Usually, deep absorbing drugs, such as clonidine and mirtazapine, are administered orally in a tablet form. On the other hand, clonidine is administered as an ointment and mirtazapine as a cream, which are used to relieve pain. Such ointments and creams need not be applied to a skin surface once and are easy to take. However, such ointments and creams are required to be dissolved or dispersed in an appropriate solvent for administration. Also, these drugs are unstable in the solvent used for administration and have short shelf-lives. There is a problem in that application of these ointments and creams is troublesome. 05a79cecff to any other rational mind. To the extent defendant contends the instruction was incomplete, the argument is not persuasive. Defendant points out the instruction omitted the phrase "or reason which amount[ed] to something more than a mere hope." However, the trial court clearly explained that it was an element that defendant had to prove by a preponderance of the evidence and that to meet its burden, defendant had to establish the existence of a reasonable doubt. The instruction also properly instructed the jury that defendant had the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence on the voluntariness of the statement. We do not find error in this regard. Relying on People v. McKissick, 414 Ill. 168 (1953), defendant next argues the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury that he could not be convicted upon a confession not corroborated by other evidence. In McKissick, the supreme court held that "to warrant a conviction on a confession evidence corroborating the statement has to be introduced and not just evidence corroborating the other aspects of the crime." McKissick, 414 Ill. at 180. Defendant insists the trial court should have instructed the jury that, in order to find defendant guilty, it had to find the evidence -10- No. 2--07--0440 corroborating his statements was sufficient to corroborate the admissions as a whole. He argues that the only corroborating evidence came from the State's expert and that this was insufficient to meet the burden of proof for first degree murder. The State responds that the record does not support defendant's argument. Under section 115--4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Code) (725 ILCS 5/115--4 (West 2006)), the jury was instructed to consider "all of the evidence" in making its determination of guilt. We do not find the trial court's failure to instruct the

The effects of acupoint stimulation on the skin blood perfusion of rats with adjuvant arthritis (AA). To investigate the effects of the electrical stimulation of bilateral Zusanli (ST36) acupoints on the skin blood perfusion of rats with adjuvant arthritis (AA). AA was induced in Sprague-Dawley rats by a subcutaneous injection of mineral oil containing heat-killed Mycobacterium tuberculosis suspended in Freund's adjuvant and the rats were then randomly assigned to one of the following four groups: the control group, the AA group, the model + neuromodulation group, or the model + vehicle group. AA rats received the electrical stimulation of ST36 and the non-acupoint of the shuifen (AF8) for 5 days, once a day, after the AA induction. Skin blood perfusion of the left and right hind legs, in the control, AA, model + neuromodulation and model + vehicle groups, was measured using a Laser Doppler Flowmeter at days 0, 5, 10, 15, 20, and 25 after the induction of AA. The skin blood perfusion of the AA rats was significantly lower than that of the control rats at days 5, 10, 15, 20, and 25 after the induction of AA. After the stimulation of ST36, the skin blood perfusion of the model + neuromodulation rats was significantly higher than that of the AA rats at each time-point and that of the model + vehicle rats at days 5, 15, 20, and 25 after the induction of AA, but did not differ from that of the control group. The stimulation of the ST36 acupoint restores the skin blood perfusion of AA rats. Removal of the inferior oblique muscle from the same position using the "inside-out" technique.
